

I urge you to maintain net neutrality rules so that citizens of the United States can continue to access the internet without interference from corporations. This is not a hypothetical threat—providers have in the past decided what customers can and cannot see, like when Verizon shut down a texting program used by NARAL or when AT&T censored a broadcast of a Pearl Jam concert. Giving corporations control over the flow of online information is dangerous to Americans as both consumers and as citizens. The United States is founded in part on the principle that the free exchange of ideas and information are important to a healthy democracy, and reversing net neutrality will weaken us.